

Heloísa Perista, sociologist, holding a PhD from the University of Leeds (UK), is a senior researcher at CESIS – Centre for Studies for Social Intervention (Lisbon). She has over three decades of research experience both in large-scale EU level comparative projects and in local case studies. In terms of methodology, her research often combines policy analysis with empirical quantitative and qualitative approach. Her research interests, adopting a gender-sensitive analysis, include: time use and the articulation of paid and unpaid work; equality between women and men; labour market and working conditions; social policy analysis; policy and project evaluation; migrations and mobility; domestic and gender-based violence; and human rights. She has maintained active cooperation, over the years, with several EU Agencies, notably Eurofound, EIGE and FRA, as well as international organisations such as ILO. She has several dozens of edited texts, in publications and in e-publications at national and international level, and maintains regular participation as speaker in seminars and conferences.
