Guidelines for the Identification of Good and Promising Practices

June 2026

1. Criteria for the Identification of Good Practices

When selecting potential good practices or promising practices in the field of preventing early marriages and early motherhood, it is important to consider the following criteria.

Criterion 1. Relevance

Does the practice directly address factors associated with early marriage and/or early motherhood? In particular:

- Does it address causes identified in the national reports and/or in the transnational report?
- Does it have objectives clearly related to prevention?

Criterion 2. Effectiveness

Is there evidence of positive results arising from the practice, particularly regarding:

- educational attainment and school retention;
- reduction in the number of early pregnancies;
- improved access to services?

Criterion 3. Community Participation

Does the community participate in the design and/or implementation of the practice?

In particular through the involvement of Roma youth, especially girls, as well as the participation of Roma women in leadership or mediation roles.

Criterion 4. Cultural Sensitivity and Non-Discrimination

Does the intervention respect cultural diversity and avoid stigmatizing approaches? In particular:

- Does it involve intercultural mediators?
- Does it promote respect for cultural identity?

Criterion 5. Gender Approach

Does the practice promote gender equality and the empowerment of girls?

More specifically:

- Does it promote actions/activities aimed at developing autonomy?
- Does it encourage girls' participation in decision-making processes?
- Does it challenge gender stereotypes?

Criterion 6. Sustainability

Does the practice demonstrate the potential to continue and maintain its results over time? In particular:

- Has it been, or can it be, integrated into existing structures or policies?
- Does it have stable funding?
- Has it built the capacity of professionals and/or the community?
- Is it likely to continue after the end of the initial funding period?

Criterion 7. Transferability

Can the practice be adapted to other contexts?

Criterion 8. Networking and Multi-Sectoral Cooperation

Does the practice involve organisations and stakeholders from different sectors?

Criterion 9. Innovation

- Does it introduce new methodologies?
- Does it develop approaches tailored to local needs?
- Does it generate solutions that may inspire other organisations?

A practice should be considered a Good Practice if it meets Criterion 1 (Relevance) and demonstrates evidence relating to at least two of the remaining criteria, preferably including Criterion 2 (Effectiveness).

Where robust evidence of results or impact is not yet available, but the initiative demonstrates relevance, innovation and potential for replication, it may be classified as a Promising Practice.
